LAMPOONS

A series of clever sayings, gibes, jests and jokes, clipped from the press of the world, about twelve in all.

JUDGE RUMMY in "THE PRIZE DANCE."

Fifi, one of the latest loves of Judge Rummy, sends him a telegram telling him that there is a prize dance to be held that evening, and urging him to join her there.

As the telegram is delivered at the dinner-table, you must pardon Mrs Rummy for inquiring as to its contents. The judge tells her it is an important case, and hastily leaves the house. Mrs Rummy weeps, until it occurs to her to look out of the window. She sees lying on the door-step, the telegram which her husband dropped in his haste.

In the meantime, the Judge and Fifi have entered the ball-room. We see the placards of the Prize Dance being carried around by "torch bearers." The announcement is then made from the floor. The orchestra begins playing, and we are permitted to see a fat lady doing a fancy dance. After the applause dies down, Rummy and Fifi leave their table and give their performance, which is enthusiastically applauded.

Mrs Rummy has dried her eyes, donned her hat and coat, and followed her erring husband to the scene of action. She appears just as Rummy and Fifi are being presented with the loving cup.

What happened then? You'll be interested in seeing this on the screen--it is very funny.
